

In-Service Withdrawals from 401(k) Plans

You're probably familiar with the rules for putting money into a 401(k) plan. But are you familiar with the rules for taking your money out?

All 401(k) plans are not the same

Federal law specifies the withdrawal options that a 401(k) plan can offer. But your plan can be stricter than the law allows (i.e., offer fewer withdrawal options), and may even provide that you can't take any money out until you reach normal retirement age (usually 65). However, many plans are more flexible.

Withdrawing your own contributions

If your plan allows, you can withdraw your own pretax and Roth contributions (and in some cases, any investment earnings on them) for one of the following reasons:

- You terminate employment
- You attain age 59½
- You become disabled
- You incur a hardship

Hardship withdrawals are permitted only if you have an immediate and heavy financial need, and only in an amount necessary to meet that need. In most plans, you must need the money to (1) purchase a principal residence or repair a principal residence damaged by an unexpected event (e.g., a hurricane), (2) prevent eviction or foreclosure, (3) pay medical bills, (4) pay certain funeral expenses, (5) pay certain education expenses, and (6) pay income tax and/or penalties due on the hardship withdrawal itself. In addition, you generally must have already utilized all other available distributions and nontaxable loans under all plans maintained by your employer. But think carefully before making a hardship withdrawal--in most plans your employer must suspend your participation in the plan for at least six months after the withdrawal, and you could lose valuable employer matching contributions.

Withdrawing employer contributions

Getting employer dollars out of a 401(k) plan can be even more challenging. Many plans won't let you withdraw employer contributions at all before you terminate employment. But some plans are more flexible, and let you withdraw at least some vested employer contributions before then. "Vested" means that you own the contributions and they can't be forfeited for any reason. In general, a 401(k) plan can let you withdraw vested matching or profit-sharing contributions if:

- You become disabled
- You incur a hardship
- You attain a specified age
- You participate in the plan for at least 5 years, or
- The employer contribution has been in the account for a minimum of 2 years

Taxation

Your own pretax contributions, company contributions, and investment earnings are taxable when withdrawn from the plan. If you've made any after-tax contributions, they'll be nontaxable when withdrawn. Each withdrawal is deemed to carry out a pro-rata portion of taxable and nontaxable dollars. Any Roth contributions, and investment earnings on them, are treated separately: if your distribution is qualified, then your withdrawal will be entirely free from federal income taxes. If your withdrawal is nonqualified, then each withdrawal will be deemed to carry out a pro-rata amount of your nontaxable Roth contributions and taxable investment earnings. And keep in mind that taxable distributions made prior to age 59½ are generally subject to a 10% premature distribution tax in addition to any income tax due, unless an exception applies.

Plan loans

Many 401(k) plans allow you to borrow money from your own account. A loan may be attractive if you don't qualify for a withdrawal, or you don't want to incur the taxes and penalties that may apply to a withdrawal.

In general, you can borrow up to one half of your vested account balance (including your contributions, your employer's contributions, and earnings), but not more than $50,000.

You can borrow the funds for up to five years (longer if the loan is to purchase your principal residence). In most cases you repay the loan through payroll deduction, with principal and interest flowing back into your account. But keep in mind that when you borrow, the unpaid principal of your loan is no longer in your 401(k) account working for you.

Be informed

You should become familiar with the terms of your employer's 401(k) plan to understand your particular withdrawal rights. A good place to start is the plan's summary plan description (SPD). Your employer will give you a copy of the SPD within 90 days after you join the plan.

Ask the Experts: Will the new health-care law affect my Medicare drug plan?

Yes, it might. Many Medicare Part D beneficiaries have had to pay for prescriptions out-of-pocket after reaching a gap in their annual coverage, referred to as the "donut hole." Currently, if you're a Medicare Part D beneficiary, you may pay up to an additional $3,610, out-of-pocket, for medicines after reaching an initial threshold of $2,830 in total prescription drug costs (including Part D payments, beneficiary co-pays, and deductibles). But, in 2010, if you fall in the coverage gap, you will receive a $250 rebate.

Starting in 2011, you will receive a 50% discount on the cost of brand-name drugs in the coverage gap. Additionally, a reduction in coinsurance for generic drugs in the coverage gap will be phased in, starting in 2011, and a similar reduction in coinsurance for brand-name drugs begins in 2013. By 2020, a combination of federal subsidies and a reduction in co-payments will reduce your total out-of-pocket costs for medications in the donut hole to 25%.

Another change affecting Medicare Part D beneficiaries relates to full-benefit dual-eligible beneficiaries (individuals eligible for both Medicaid and Medicare). Dual-eligible beneficiaries receiving institutional care, such as in a nursing home facility, do not owe any co-payments for prescriptions covered by Part D. However, dual-eligible beneficiaries receiving long-term care services at home or in a day-care community setting are subject to such co-payments. Beginning in 2012, the new legislation removes this imbalance; individuals receiving services at home or in a community setting will no longer be subject to co-payments.

Also, beginning in 2011, the time period during which Part D and Medicare Advantage beneficiaries can make changes to their coverage is extended and runs from October 15 through December 7. This extension should provide more time for beneficiaries to consider their options while ensuring that any benefit changes are properly incorporated into the plan for the following year.
